RAILWAY BILLS OUR NEW NAVY

Ratify Agreement Be- tween B.C. Govern- ment And C. N. R.

Our New Navy Discussed In Nova Scotia Legis- lature

Victoria, March 1.—The railway legislation promised by the provincial government was introduced into the local Legislature to-day. It consisted of three bills; one ratifying provincial agreement entered between the government and Mackenzie and Mann. A second act to incorporate the Canadian Northern Railway Company and a third a bill ratifying the agreement between the Kettle River Valley Railway Company.

The manorandum of agreement with Mackenzie and Mann provides that in return for the guarantee by the government of the company for the construction of the British Columbia lines to the extent of $35,000 a mile including eighty miles on Vancouver Island, the railway pledges itself to complete these lines within four years, the lines to run from English Bluff near Vancouver to connect with the Canadian Northern lines at the eastern boundary of the province and from Victoria to a point on Barkley Sound.

The railway company agrees never to seek Dominion incorporation and places the control forever in the hands of the provincial government without appeal to the Dominion Railway Commission. A car ferry between the island and the mainland is provided for and car shops are to be built in Victoria.

Mackenzie and Mann covenant to indemnify the province against any loss through their guarantee depositing securities to the extent of $50,000 with the government as forfeit. The money realized from the sale of the bonds remains to the credit of the provincial government to be paid over upon the different sections of the work being certified to as completed.

Through Mountains in Two Years

Montreal, Feb. 25.—Mr. J. W. Stewart, of the contracting firm of Foley, Larsen & Stewart, left yesterday for the West, and although he would express no opinion, it is expected that his firm will get the contract for the gap, extending from the top of the summit westward 400 miles, where the same firm's contract of 245 miles running up from Prince Rupert, is met with. To date 5000 men are engaged on the section of 300 miles west of Edmonton, and on the 245 miles eastward from the Pacific coast and a great many more will be put on during the coming summer.

The manager states that 1912 will see the road open for traffic through the mountains and enough is now known as to the situation through the pass, a distance of 60 miles, to justify Mr. Stewart's saying that there is room for 20 sets of rails.

The most surprising part of his statement, however, is to the effect that the Mackenzie & Mann survey and absolute location fairly hugs the Grand Trunk Pacific from Edmonton westward a distance of 350 miles. The two lines will be practically in sight of each other for all this distance.

"Goodness!" he exclaimed.
"What an awful waste!"

The stout woman turned round and glared at the little man and said sternly: "Mind your own business!"

* His * Courtship.

By HELEN R. MARTIN
Author of "Tillie's Minnesota Maid."

Again to Kiroos' ear that something in her speech to unlike him of the results of their courtship. "I know it by the fact—for an instant he did not answer her question. His silence was answer enough for her, and again she quickly stepped away from the fence.

"No"—he abruptly stopped her—"you don't like me?"

He was struck with the absurdity of his telling a young woman that her society did not honor him. He saw in the dimness how her face lit up at his words, and a quick compassion stirred him.

"Poor girl," he thought.

But in the same instant he realized that her sudden radiance was clouded over by her habitual pensiveness.

"I'm not important enough to come her response in a low, sorrowful voice.

"Am I?"

He stopped and looked at her. "Now, think," he asked after an instant's weighing of it, "just what do you mean by that?"

"A kitten or a poule would annoy you more than I, so you don't feel obliged to dodge about to be rid of me as you do of others—who are more important!"

Hello! She had found her voice; she was becoming articulate! Was that a note of bitterness he caught in her tone?

"I will go indoors now," she repeated, with a melancholy dignity, as again she drew back from the fence.

He had an impulse to urge her to stay. There was an undefined impression in his mind that he wanted to question her heart—but both the impulse and the impatience were too vague to urge to prompt action; and before he could clarify them she was gone.

Encue meantime, as she sped across the orchard, was already growing passionately that she had left him. If she did not annoy him was not that enough for her to expect? Why had she not remained to drink in at least the happiness of being here? What did it matter if to him her existence was an irritant of a fly?

"He was speaking to me—to me—and I came away!"

The stopped short, her quick walk half turned to go back. Her eyes fell upon two figures just coming into the orchard and walking toward the garden house. They were Kiroos and his wife. She stopped, her heart failing, and they disappeared behind the fence. "What's the hold-up?" she asked. "I'm moving off, though escape was not very easy. She heard Daly call out to him to stop him. She saw him hesitate, then turn back and wait. Daly ran up to him and caught hold of his shirt sleeve. Georgiana followed with slow, steady grace.

Presently the three of them went across the orchard together toward the lane that led to the hill. Were they going to climb the hill? The sunset view from there was very fine. It was the one spot in all the region that was dear to her, because here, in solitude, she had known some hours of peace and even of happiness, and the pleasure had been to her heart very own—and now those girls were going there with him—to her hill.

She shrank back into the shadow of some trees as they came near enough to see her.

"It's a good deal of a climb," she heard Dr. Kiroos say in a tone of warning.

"I'm game!" Daly declared. And then they moved out of her hearing.

She watched them as they emerged to the open air and went up the lane until they disappeared around a bend at the foot of the hill.

Her bosom rose and fell in a long deep breath as at last she turned away and slowly, with her head wearily drooping, walked through the garden to the kitchen porch and went into the house.

CHAPTER VIII.

YOUR mother wouldn't leave me go. Abu, you know that, even if I wanted to."

"Yes," said Abe, bitterly, "even if you wanted? That's the way you put it, isn't? And you don't want, if you'd make your mind up, Encue, that you wanted to go, don't you know that you'd have to give up your home to stop you? Because you've got your age, and if mom tries to stop you you have the right to up and tell her, 'I don't have to.' It's time you knew that once!"

Encue looked at her father brother and would be lover with sudden anger. They were in the spring house, he standing in the doorway and barring her exit, and she, with her daily burdens of butter, cheese and milk for the house, was surreptitiously returning by a back way from his morning's outing.

"You little hussy!" cried Mrs. Mornstarling, shrill and sharp as a dinner bell.

Abe, looking shamefaced, but his mother, not stopping to discuss the master with him, walked after Encue into the house, angry uprisings following the words of his mother.

"Some sort of a spirit creature the son is not in turn that woman and resent her abuse!" Dr. Kiroos retorted.

"Put our mother and father to work."

She was successful, repeating the lesson which had been ground into her ever since she could remember anything, "and so have a right to control me, haven't they?"

There was an anxious wistfulness in her eyes which thrilled her balled and clenched fist.

"Don't you earn your keep and a good bit over where [which] you don't get? If they had a hired girl do half what you do, still they'd have to give her two a week."

"But I have to pay for the things that happened to me when I was too little to work."

"Och, Encue, you was always wonderful dumplin'! There ain't no time since you was five years old ready that you can't eat all it's got to keep you full. You know that when you was too little—well," he said mysteriously, "I could tell you something if I wanted somebody where would make you may to mom and pop pretty quick. 'I don't have to.' They had a right to my wages."

"Tell me what you mean about those two years of my childhood."

Abe hesitated. "Pop would jaw me somethin' terrible if I told you. You just wait. Some time I'll tell you. You won't have any spans up you go and tell 'em in. Ain't you will, Encue? Och, go on!"

He attempted a clumsy comes, but she drew back. "Abe scowled. "You might as well tell me. I can't tell you. You don't need to do that to be rid of me as you do of others—who are more important!"

MCLAREN OF THE ENTERPRISE HAS HAD THRILLING CAREER.

GAS TO FIGHT FIRE.

An Incombustible Preparation Invents

ed for Ships by Australian.

An ingenious device to smother fire on ships by distributing throughout the vessel incombustible gases drawn from their funnels has been invented by Mr. Alexander McLaren, of Sydney, Australia, and no less than 364 vessels were reported burned at sea, not to speak of those that doubtless were destroyed fires, there were hundreds of others that, though extinguished on board, still smoldered, awaiting a fresh attack, and many more damage had been done.

Methods of fighting fire on shipboard are now more numerous.

The Australian Province papers the other day chronicled the arrival of the steamer, after a very rough passage, at the stout coast steamer Enterprise, which maintains a wonderful regular service between Georgetown and other ports along the east side of Prince Edward Island and Pictou, Hawkesbury, Magravie, Port Hope, and New York. Now the port of Pictou, a town of 10,000 inhabitants, and capital of the enterprise, William McLaren, is one of the oldest and most astute navigators in the Maritime Province. For several years his name was familiar throughout Canada as owner of the steamer, the first Canadian merchant vessel to be equipped with oxygen apparatus.

During the recent war, Mr. McLaren

With this issue of the Blairmore Enterprise, it will be noticed that it is under entirely new management. The Bartlett Publishing Company has purchased from the Foothills Job Print and News Co., all their title and interest in the Blairmore plant, and will endeavor in future to present the reading public with a paper free from any political bias, and so made up as to make advertisements more attractive and valuable, and our reading columns local as far as is possible, following the principles laid down by our worthy predecessor, Mr. J. A. McDonald.

With last week's issue, Mr. McDonald stepped down from the editorial chair to engage in personal interests which necessitate his supervision.

To Mr. McDonald's energy and perseverance this paper is indebted for the important place it now holds as a news and advertising journal, and many will regret his retirement from the editor's bench.

Editorial Opinions

We may have a new post office when "Halley's" comes again.

We received amongst our last week's exchanges a copy of the Peace River Pilot, published at Edmonton. There is a chance of the Pilot becoming the leading light of the north.

It pays to live soberly, deal justly, to think kindly, to act friend-ship rather than talk it. These are among the values of life that money cannot buy; these are the things in which all may be rich and none need be poor.

We have also received a copy of the annual illustrated number of the Calgary Morning Albertan. It is profuse with interesting views and data of the province, and contains some glowing write-ups of the premier towns of The Pass.

The Lethbridge Herald refers to the many dangers to which the Pass towns are subjected, including in the list, hill-slides, cave-ins, snow-slides, and cyclones, but forgot the most important of all—that Blairmore was in danger of becoming the prettiest, the largest and most industrial town in Alberta.

There are one and three-quarter million children, between the age of ten and fifteen years, employed in the mines and factories of the United States, but not a single pup, colt, or other animal of such a relatively age is ever forced to do any work neatly executed.

THING BUT EAT. A GLORIOUS CIVILIZATION THAT TREATS ANIMALS BETTER THAN CHILDREN—THE COMING FATHERS AND MOTHERS OF THE RACE.

Dr. Warnock strongly resented the criticism which has been stoned against the liberal government, in connection with the Alberta and Great Waterways railway deal, and last week made a very able and aggressive speech before the house at Edmonton. The doctor said "that it was because a number of men in the legislature had the courage to stand up for honest government that they are called 'traitors.' If there are traitors they are not in the ranks of men who are standing up for honest irreproachable government, and when the votes are counted at the next provincial election, the men who now stand out for honest government would not be proven the traitors to the liberal party."

EVERETT, WASH., MARCH 1.—Details of the disaster that overwhelmed the Great Northern passenger trains when an avalanche swept the trains and a portion of the town of Wellington at the west part of the Cascade tunnel down the mountain side, are received and the horror grows. Twenty-three lives are known to have been lost when the mass of snow, loose stones and uprooted trees buried the cars containing seventy sleeping persons over the narrow ledge of the high line down to the bottom of the canyon, 200 feet below, and when the last night's reports were received twenty-five more missing. Besides these a score or more are seriously injured.

THE TWO TRAINS were carried by the great wave of ice and snow

when the westbound Spokane and the westbound transcontinental fast mail. The latter carried no passengers. The list of the dead and injured are believed to have been passengers on the Spokane express, forty of whom were on the train at the time of the disaster.

The Game or Life

This life is but a game of cards,
That mortals have to learn;
Each shuffles, cuts, and deals the pack,
And each a trump doth turn.

Some bring a high card to the top,
And others bring a low;

Some hold a hand quite flush of trumps,
While others none can show.

Some shuffle with a practiced hand
And pack their cards with care,
So that they know, when they are dealt,
Where all the leaders are.

Thus fools are made the dupes of rogues,
While rogues each other cheat;
And he is very wise indeed,
Who never needs defeat.

When playing, some throw out the ace,
The counting cards to save;
Some play the deuce and some the ten,
But many play the knave.

Some play for money, some for fun,
And some for worldly tame;
But not until the game's played out,
Can they count up their game.

When hearts are trumps, we play for love,
And pleasure rules the hour;
No thoughts of sorrow check our joy
In beauty's rosy bower.

We sing, we dance, sweet voices make,
Our hearts at random play;

And while our trumpet remains on top
Our game's a holiday.

When diamonds chance to crown the pack,
The players stake their gold;

And heavy sums are lost and won
By gamblers, young and old.

Intent on winning, each game
Doth watch with eager eye,
How may he see his neighbor's cards
And beat him on the sly.

When clubs are trumps, look out for war
On ocean or on land,
For dreadful horrors always come
When clubs are held in hand.

Then lives are staked instead of gold,
The dogs of war are freed;

In the Far East we all have seen
How clubs have had the lead.

Last game of all is when the spade
Is turned by hand of Time;

He always plays the closing game
In every age and clime.

No matter how much each man wins,
Or how much each man saves;
The spade will finish up the game
And dig the players' graves.

A Winter Song

All snug and warm,
Safely in their rooms;

The birds in sheltered stalls are lowing;

And here we find
Their keeper kind,

A wealth of care and feel bestowing.

No angry word
Nor shout is heard;

Him rich or cuff is a stranger.

There is no angry bed,

Of straw he spreads;

Fair measure fills each trough and manger.

It suits them all;

From stall to stall;

And while he sings and whistles gayly,

With stool and gails,

He never fails

To reap a goodly harvest daily.

Though snow and frost

Are here and there,

White wintry winds are ruddy blowing,

Warmth, care and feed

Meet every need,

And fill the pail to overflowing.

A MESSAGE OF HOPE TO WORRIED MOTHERS

There is no other medicine equal to Baby's Own Tablets for the cure of stomach, bowel and teething troubles. They come as a message of hope to worried mothers as they nervously peevishly carrying children, bright and well. And the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that this medicine contains no opium or poisonous soothing stuff. Mrs. Maurine M. Williams, Oshawa, says—"I think Baby's Own Tablets the best medicine in the world. I know of nothing that can equal them in curing babies of their teething troubles." Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicines Co., Brockville, Ont.

HAS LOST HIS JOB.

The Professional Journeyman Passes Away by Recent Order.

The average man is notoriously so anxious to escape jury duty that a character who made it his chief business in life to obtain selection as a member of coroners' juries would seem to many the creation of a Dickensonian imagination. That such characters exist, however, the authorities have fully proved, and many a coroner who died of a stroke of apoplexy held inquest on the death of some unfortunate, recognises old familiar faces when the jury is sworn. His reason for that is that he is a member of coroners' juries is attended by no somnolent or haggardness. An officer of number one police division was assigned to the duty of digging up a junction of sewer pipes to be held right. He is supposed to go out on the street and impress some citizens who can give an excuse for evading jury duty, and many a person who does not like this press goes system of rendering service to their country the professional journeyman who expects that the task is a boon. He picks up an odd dollar or so that way and the task is ended. In addition with the income of life, one doesn't believe it adds greatly to his self-esteem. After he has figured at his half dozen inquests he becomes his own eyes—a part of the great fabric of society, a part which covers us all and takes his duties as seriously though he were the residing Justice of the County of Alberta.

For the sake of his son he thinks that the coroner and the representatives of the crown are rather lax in the performance of their duty, and sees that they let points "touchin' on and appertainin' to" the death of the deceased slip by him. So he takes to his rooms and himself and emerges the less sophisticated humor around him to do likewise provided they do not show an ambition for his pains by a finding of guilty.

For such reasons the order went recently in Ontario that the most indolent of coroner's juries was to be accepted for jury service again, and thereby hangs a tale.

The result of this daily repetition must have induced that of late coroners' juries had been loading their verdicts with condemnations of almost every existing institution.

For such reasons the order went out.

Some come have shown puzzling eccentricities. One broke up into five small courts, which pursued parallel paths. The tall of a second showed kinks, as if it had been hit in the side in an impact. It is not unusual for juries to have two or three tails, and at least one has been observed which threw out lateral branches.

Roman Pottery. The ancient Romans excelled in making pottery. They possessed regular muffle ovens and even a sort of producer gas oven.

Seaweed. From seaweed when reduced to ash with lime to make mortar, the ancient Romans used to make their concrete preparations in use today. Some of these are iodine, bromine, hydrobromic acid, iodides of sodium, mercury, potassium, magnesium and calcium. From it is extracted coloring matter, volatile oil, and its ingredients are used in photography.

Colonies as Kingdoms. Queen Elizabeth was commonly spoken of as queen of Virginia. Virginia and Carolina were kingdoms under the same roof. Massachusetts was recognized as a state kingdom by Cromwell.

Verdict could be made the vehicle of his opinion. In certain cases there was a desire which gave scope for wholesale condemnation, and after the first sitting of inquest he would drop down with a newspaper man and a bottle of beer and get great possibilities of the case in the way of a good, lengthy sound verdict. With the reporter's assistance he would then drop in to the concluding sitting which condemned the administration of the affairs of the city of Toronto from garret to cellar.

He used to write letters to the papers until the indifference of editors showed him that the press was not interested in his opinions, and he dropped out of public view. Then he disappeared at most political meetings as the man in the audience who asks questions of candidates he is opposed to, and leads others to drop out of the discussion.

HOW THE PRINCE CAME

Jim Wade Fared His, Would Lose His Daughter, and He Did.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyright, 1904, by American Press Association.

Jim Wade shielded his eyes with one broad hand and looked over his rich fields ripe for the harvest. As far as the eye could see from his point of vantage on the ranch house steps the land was his own.

Because Molly Wade was his only child he had given up his time to a motherless girl-child; war-for-fear and apprehensions for her future. The best in the world was now too good for Molly, and so away to school Molly went, and when she came back unchanged, unspoiled, it was his pride.

She came back as simple hearted and home loving as when she had taken her tearful farewell of him. The so-called broader life for women did not suit her, for Molly Wade—she was first and last a home-loving homemaker.

Jim sighed even then as he watched her directing the affairs of the house they occupied. Almost any day now some man would come to the ranch to come to him and end his nest of the母birding. And each morning he looked searchingly into her clear blue eyes seeking some change that might tell him of the threatened invasion of her heart, for when there were no men about.

This morning Molly dashed around from the corral on her little black mare Dinky.

"Where now, honey?" asked Jim.

"I ride to town to see Captain you come, deary," said her mare was like ripened corn silk, and her eyes were as blue as the sky overhead. The black of her hat made a frame for her delicate skin, tinted with bloom and with a softness that was like a grace that was only equaled by her dawning.

"Sorry, honey, it's my day, you know. The old man's got to stay home and work this morning. Don't you care?"

Molly patted him on the neck, with a smile, and a small revolver gleamed in the master. "Right here, dad. I'll be home in time for dinner, son."

"Don't let any fairy princess run away with you, daughter," admonished Jim. "You know I'm a lot alone, that's why I'm running after you, little girl."

more gravity than fun in that voice, and Molly felt that this old, old fast between them was becoming a serious matter to her father.

She urged Dinky to the foot of the steps and flicked her father lightly on the shoulder. "I'm sorry, dad, I'm afraid, I never believe you are worried. I've never even seen the man—or prince—I'd leave you for there. There, you satisfied?"

He leaned down and kissed her softly. "I'm glad you're home again, and I hope you'll bring me a good many more days."

"This is my day, I'm afraid, I'll be right along with you."

With a laughing, backward glance, Molly rode away toward the fields of tall corn that had not yet failed to the snapping reapers.

A musical noise soon whistled in the shade. It was like a thick forest, though Molly, as hasty as she was, turned her way daintily through the tall stalks.

Overhead the yellowed leaves rustled crisply. On either side she heard the steps of the man who had come to the prince.

Molly's rose-flecked face lit up to touch of her soft hair. Her eyes grew dreamy as she listened to the whispering and a look came into her face—a look that her father had never seen.

She had had her day dream—In fact, she had dreamed of a lover who came out of a fascinating world of which she had caught a mere glimpse in her school days. The prince who would come and claim her, she did want to come, however, down the aisle road in the future. Handsome he would be and merry and rollicking as no many of these gay automobilists appeared.

But when it came to the wrench of parting with her dear father, Molly's attitude had suddenly changed to one where the dashingly motorist became vanquished of farm life and elected to stay at Wade's ranch for a lifetime, with a huge red car standing outside.

All at once he drove in and the sound of a sound other than the striking of a corn. There was the thud, thud, of hoofs in another aisle near by. Perhaps it was her father, or, at any rate, it would be one of the men from the ranch.

"Hello!" came back in a man's deep voice.

As the man lifted his battered hat, Molly realized that it was a dragoon, and his hands grew warm under the pale of his dark eyes. He was very tall to look upon, young and straight and strong, with sun-brown face and chestnut hair. His blue eyes and white teeth shone when you were needful. I need you, and—Molly needs me now, the dragoon wanted to say.

"I need you both," said Norton, with emotion. "I am a prince, aves, heart," he said, kissing Molly's bright face so near his own.

"A prince in disguise," whispered Molly.

"I am afraid, I've lost my way," said the stranger pleasantly.

"I have been wandering in this country the last three hours. Perhaps you can direct me to Wade's place, or is it possible you are lost too?"

"I can show you the way easily. I am Mr. Wade's daughter," she explained over her shoulder as the little mare walked on.

The stranger turned his horse into the side of the road. Molly and followed close on his wake.

"My name is Norton Scott Norton," he said after a little pause. "I'm looking for the ranch house. I was told Mr. Wade needed help."

"They used to make crop before the 20th, and father was wishing this morning for his half a dozen extra men."

"I am very glad," said Norton.

Somewhat in the tone of his voice, Norton sounded like a man who was as plain as he. If he had told his story in many words that he had been in hard luck and that he had traveled a long distance in search of this job. The unbearable heat he rode was to be sold, probably purchased with his driving-pride.

They came to the edge of the corral and emerged into a well beaten road border on either side by corn.

"I missed this road somehow," said Norton, riding abreast of Molly. "It is a most excellent road."

His luck of a watch deterred Molly from looking at her own little time-piece. She glanced up at the sun with a delightful twinkle of her pretty brown eyes.

"Dear me, it is late! We must hurry!" she said.

Behind them came the shriek of a siren and the distant hum of a speeding motorcar. Molly had barely time to turn her horse to the edge of the road when her eyes caught a dimly outlined glimpse of the strummer's bucky horse rigid in the path of the speeding vehicle.

There was a warning shout a queer crashing sound and a cloud of dust.

Then Scott Norton, with a yell of pain, leaped from his seat, and the man who had been driving the automobile turned his head to see what had happened.

Lying on the ground, a pool of blood surrounded him, while the man who had been driving the automobile turned his head to see what had happened.

Such a phenomenon occurred at Bradford some years ago. What is described as "a silent thunderbolt" fell in a graveyard, destroying one monument and smashing to atoms nearly twenty monuments containing wreaths and flowers.

In the same summer Swancombe, in Kent was terrified by a freak of lightning. All of a sudden a great mass of blue fire flashed across the sky and was gone.

It was known that the fine old parish church had been struck.

The building, with all its old carved oak, was soon a roaring furnace, and only a part of the chancel was saved.

Scientists are still hopeless at sea as to the cause of that peculiar phenomenon known as electric lightning.

Coventry some years ago during a violent thunderstorm it passed along a street like a soap bubble built of blue fire and drifted into a shed, where it exploded, blowing the roof off the place.

Rheims, in France, a similar ball came into a cobber's shop through the open window. The shopkeeper, who had been resting, was still, paralyzed with terror, while his reverent vestment hovered for several seconds overhead. Then it moved toward the fire-place and presently passed up the chimney.

It was a small burning, and the upper part of the chimney came crashing down.

Not long ago Count G. Hamilton made a record of a similar freak of electricity. He was sitting at his desk in his study, when just after a vivid flash of lightning a brilliant white ball appeared over the valise and after hanging poised there for some seconds went off with a bang.

Fortunately it did no harm to any one although it was quite close to several people. Those who saw it suggested it was a ball of cold lightening.

In November, 1902, Sydney, Australia, was visited by a terrible dust storm, in the midst of which a perfect rain of electric blue balls began to fall.

These set fire to a number of houses, and a most appalling panic set in. A crowd of people were stampeding about the streets, and people ran madly out of their houses into the ink black dust drifts.

The most amazing and terrifying displays of these phenomena are recorded in the pages of the "Times." In 1898 there was on the top of a mountain in the Caucasus when a huge violet ball surrounded by vivid rays, struck a rock, burst by an explosion like a bomb, burst into atoms. One of the party who was badly hurt.

"It's our friend," he said, with dignity. "We're in the wrong place, door is open, and we're in the wrong place. Look out for my friends. Take care, gentle companion—go slow; go slow."

They departed, sobered by the experience, while Hannah, the servant, to the sick chamber to await the arrival of the doctor who still took the doctor's name.

As quickly as she could, she took the doctor up to the room.

"It's our friend," he said, with dignity. "We're in the wrong place, door is open, and we're in the wrong place. Look out for my friends. Take care, gentle companion—go slow; go slow."

"Way, dad!" blushed Molly. "Any way, I need Mr. Norton, and, anyway, I need him to be the right man wanted by Jim Wade to take care of him."

They were home by ten o'clock, and the horse, fat and sleek, was a picture of health.

"I need you both," said Norton, with emotion. "I am a prince, aves, heart," he said, kissing Molly's bright face so near his own.

Gebro Talks of His Trip

Samuel Gebro, the electric light promoter of Lewistown, was in Judith Gap on his way home to Lewistown from a four months visit in European countries.

Mr. Gebro says France is the richest nation on earth and the wealth is equitably distributed among all the people. He attributes this condition to the fact that everybody works and that every foot of the soil is intensively cultivated. All the land there is fertilized every third year and crop rotation is followed. The first year after summer fallowing and fertilization, a crop of sugar beets is raised. The second year the same land is sowed to wheat and the third year to oats. Then comes a year of rest for the soil, when the same rotation is followed. Farm laborers get 40 cents a day and board themselves. France, in area, is just one fourth larger than the state of Montana, yet it supports 15,000,000 people.

In Serbia, Bulgaria and Turkey the people raise only enough to eat, as all surplus would be taken by the crown and the inhabitants are poverty-stricken. He has seen whole families herding a flock of twelve sheep, and the people were clothed in the primitive garb worn in the time of Jacob.

Constantinople has a population of a million and a half and there is not a telephone or electric light in the city. One street in the city has a horse car line and that has been in use about 30 years.

HEARD OF STRIKE?

Mr. Gebro had heard of the switchmen's strike in this country while he was away, but he was not aware of the fact that he individually was a loser to the extent of $10,000 or $12,000 by it, until he reached his ranch, not far from Billings. Before the strike, his brother, who is managing the ranch, had made a shipment of scalded lamb to market and they brought a good price. He has been feeding 4,000 more with sugar beets for several weeks in preparation for the Chicago fair, and they were in prime condition. He started 15 acres from the Northern Pacific and they were side-tracked at his ranch. During the process of loading for shipment, the rail road officials wired him that they would not accept this consignment under any circumstances, as a strike of the switchmen was on.

He figured that it cost him a dollar a head to feed the lambs on sugar beets, and putting them back onto hay they lost weight, and he has to carry them over to next year, feeding them on $20-a-ton fodder. Mr. Gebro believes there should be a national law compelling capital and labor to submit their differences to a board of arbitration in cases where impending strikes will cause innocent people to suffer.

He was emphatic in his statement that he intended to extend his electric light line from Moore to Judith Gap this summer. He has faith in the prosperity of Judith Gap and believes the town will grow rapidly as the surrounding country is developed.
